Try to Prove Gas Kills Microbes. Gas companies, faced with the peril of seeing their product supplanted by electricity, are struggling vigorously to find arguments that will prove the superiority of gas over electricity fer lighting, cooking and heating. The advocates of electricity urge that electric lamps do not pollute the air with the products of incomplete combustion and do not form hot combustible gases that must be removed.

The advocates of gas reply that the great production of heat by gaslight fixtures brings about a natural ventilation effect through the air currents it produces, so that the deleterious gaseous products of combustion are never allowed to accumulate in the air. They also assert that microbes in the air are destroyed by the gas flame and by the traces of combustion like sulphurous acid, which exhibit an antiseptic ac-
